DEVELOPING TALENT IN YOUNG PEOPLE REVISITED

by Mark Lonsdale

Many sports benefit from modern developments in sports science, but high-performance judo is one sport that benefits more from hard work and well-structured training than from science or computer modeling. But one area where research and study has been of value is in gaining a better appreciation for long-term athlete development (LTAD) and the interrelated training requirements. Understanding how athletes develop at various ages helps us to develop coaching methods and training programs which are athlete-centered rather than sports-centered.

Dr. Benjamin Bloom’s research and book, Developing Talent in Young People (1985), has been a valuable resource on this topic. It is also a book that can be found in the libraries of many coaches and is used by the US Olympic Committee. So for the club-level judo instructor or coach who may not be familiar with this work, it is worth revisiting a few of the relevant findings.

Bloom’s work was based on interviews with 120 highly accomplished young people, including musicians, Olympic swimmers and world-class tennis players. Interviews were also conducted with their parents and teachers so as to gain a better understanding of their influences.

Of the individuals interviewed, the ones who “made it” were not necessarily the most talented, or possessed natural ability, but were those that demonstrated persistence, competitiveness, eagerness, and a love of the sport (or activity). The study group also stated that they benefited from dedicated teachers, for whom they felt love, admiration and respect.

One of the notable findings was that the majority had become involved in the particular activity before the age of 12 years, and that they had been encouraged by one or both parents. Many had also received one-on-one individualized instruction or training.

From this, Bloom noted a number of deficiencies in group instruction as it relates to a structured school setting. When at school, the students’ lives are governed by a timetable and “assembly line” form of education and learning that does not allow the individual time to delve deeply into any one subject or activity.

Bloom also identified three development phases: early years, middle years, late years – all of which reinforces the argument in performance sports for coaching to be individualized, age-appropriate, and athlete-driven. Prior to Bloom, another educational researcher, Alfred North Whitehead (1929), described three similar phases of developmental that were also influenced by age. These were:

1. Romance
2. Precision
3. Integration

The Romance phase is where the child is drawn into an activity or sport and is able to play, explore, and have fun. It is in these early formative years that the child will develop a love of the sport that may carry him or her through their entire lives.

The Precision phase is the systematic learning, coaching, and mastering of technical skills. It is in this phase that young athletes move from “playing” a sport to being serious “players” and competitors.
The integration phase is the continued study with a master or coach, and long hours of daily practice and training. The athlete learns to translate training and technical skills into improved personal performance.

This discussion leads us back to the term “age-appropriate,” which is often used when discussing modern judo training. Some believe that this simply means more fun and games for very young judoka; and they are partly correct. There is no argument that if a judo instructor can help develop a love of the sport with juniors at the club level, they may stay with judo, or continue returning to it throughout their lives. While all too many students seem to drop out in their teens and college years, many also return to the dojo as adults. However, it is the dedicated systematic training (precision phase) throughout the mid- and late-teen years that is a critical phase in the development of national and world class athletes.

Expanding on this as it relates to judo, we may discover talent in a 13 or 14 year old, but it is from 16 to 19 years that we are developing and building the future national champions. There is a level of strength and toughness required for judo that only comes with maturity, but for the instructor or coach, the challenge is maintaining an interest in the sport through these difficult teenage years.

So to be effective, even at the grassroots level, coaching should be athlete-centered rather than sport-centered. This necessitates that the development of coaches should be linked directly to the athlete’s age, maturity & abilities. Taking this into consideration, it would be logical that the training and certification of coaches should be both age-based and performance-based. A coach should be educated in the training requirements specific to children (5 to 12 years); teens and young adults (13 to 19 years); seniors and Masters, both male and female. Similarly, he or she should be trained and certified to coach at various levels of sports performance from novice and recreational through high performance and elite athlete development. The coach is then able to deliver an appropriate level of training in an individualized, age-appropriate manner.

Based on personal experience, a dedicated young judoka who is enjoying judo and winning at the local level by age 13 could be winning at the junior nationals by 15 or 16. With the right coaching and the support of his or her family, that same judoka should be gaining international experience by 18 and a serious senior competitor by their early twenties. But unlike other activities that require only fitness or skill, judo also requires a level of mental and physical toughness that only comes with age and experience.

One of the traits that separate dedicated judoka from other athletes is the ability to take a pounding on the mat one day and still turn up for training the next. Anyone who has trained with the Japanese or French national teams will appreciate what it takes to turn up day after day knowing that the training will be brutal, and the only science that will help is a bottle of Advil and several rolls of tape.

CONCLUSION

1. Coaches should be able to identify the transition point where a young judoka is ready to move from “playing judo” to becoming a serious “judo player,” – keeping in mind that not all judoka aspire to be serious competitors. At the club level the instructor will find that the majority of members (~85-90%) will be recreational judoka who are perfectly happy playing judo well into their retirement years.

2. If we expect children and teens to maintain an interest in judo, they must develop a love of the sport at an early age. Moving too quickly into rigorous training for competition (shiai) before they have matured, may turn them off judo for life. This maturation occurs at about 13 to 17 years of age, depending on the individual. In the early teens, young people begin making their own decisions as to what they want to do, and not just what their parents or teachers are pushing them to do.

3. As young athletes “graduate” from the romance phase, they will need continued encouragement, coaching and support to get them through the more demanding systematic phase of performance development training. They will also need financial support from their parents for travel to training camps and competitions.

4. As athletes age, their love of the sport should be demonstrated by an equal love of teaching juniors and helping to develop the next generation of players and champions. Former champions should feel both an obligation and a passion for passing on their hard-earned

* From Amazon: B.S. Bloom’s Developing Talent in Young People (1985) is a great book and suitable for anyone working with children. Similar in nature, but preceding Stephen Covey’s work in 7 Habits of Highly Effective People, this book looks at common traits among talented young people across a multitude of disciplines. The USOC uses this work as a core fundamental in how coaches should work with kids.

Tiny Tots Judo: Small People, Big Judo
by Tony Farah

When my 2 children and I began judo about 12 years ago, our club (like most) started enrollment for kids at age 6. I asked why clubs do not enroll kids at younger ages, and I heard all the reasons: judo is too technical, it is physically demanding, it could be dangerous for young kids.

I did not buy into that, so about 5 years ago, I approached our head instructor Gary Goltz with the idea to teach judo to kids as young as 3 years old. Anyone who knows Sensei Goltz knows that he would not stop at anything to promote judo. His instructions to me were simple "create a program that will instill the love of judo in these kids so much that parents will use judo to reward good behavior or as a privilege that can be taken away as a reprimand."

The program has been a great success! Today we average 40 kids per session from ages 3 to 6.

The recipe for a successful Tiny Tots Judo Program is simple:

Make sure the program is fun. This starts with the instructors and assistants that enjoy being around little kids, have lots of patience, are able to communicate at their level, and build a good rapport while maintaining authority. My choice for a second instructor was my daughter Ashton. She started teaching with me at the age of 18. Kids and parents love her. She is also an inspiration to little girls who want to achieve a black belt someday.

Use games for warm-ups, and drills. We start our warm ups with imitating animals: duck walk, small rabbit hops, big frog leaps, monkey walks, alligator walks, etc. Each designed to strengthen a core muscle. Be warned: Use the correct animal name/walk combination or get ready to be rebuked by these little kids as they each demonstrate what the walk should look like. Throw in a little activity where they get to yell and scream "KIAI" as loud as they can. It is always a good excitement builder. For instance if you want to teach "The Guard", play Sharks and Penguins. To teach "Turn Overs", play bull dogs. To emphasize moving around with a partner and controlling him, play "Dodge Ball" or "Snakes Pit." There are lots of resources for games, be creative and don't be hesitant to experiment.

Simplify instructions. Avoid walking around the mat with thumbs stuck in your belt, shouting orders and instructions. Do not be too technical. Forget lectures on Kuzushi and Tai Sabaki and Tsukuri; instead, explain falls, throws, holds, and principles with terminology a 3 year old will understand. Ultimately the kids learn by discovering what works and being corrected while trying rather than by following the instructions or even demonstrations.

For example, to teach o-goshi we tell the class to "grab your partner with the judo grip. Pull your partner up on his toes like a ballerina. Give your partner a big hug around the waist and say Moo like a cow. Turn and look where you partner is looking. Bow to throw your partner and hold their arm while they take a breakfall."

After explaining and showing a throw, I like the kids to do the throw with the instructors and assistants. That allows one-on-one instruction and the opportunity to add details as needed. After couple of classes practicing the throw the kids will then start trying it on each other.
Establish familiar, comfortable routines. Changing exercises and expectations too often can cause the kids to get confused and frustrated. On the other hand, seeing incremental improvements in performing exercises can encourage and motivate the kids. Remember that each child has a different level of athleticism and coordination and learns at his/her own pace. Make sure not to compare their performances. Instead, track each one individually and be sure to mention any progress they make. I can’t count the number of times kids shouted my name, and with the biggest smile of pride on their faces to show me how they can now do something that they were struggling with previously.

Competition is an integral part of judo. During my relatively short time in Judo, I’ve heard the competition argument over and over again. Clubs are labeled as competitive or recreational. I do not intend to delve into this debate, but I’ve come to believe that the competitive or recreational aspect of Judo is not determined by the club as much as by the judoka. Offering young kids the opportunity to experience competition is critical to their loving and appreciating the sport.

After each 3-month session we hold a Tiny Tots tournament. The event is optional and free, and over 90% participate. Parents, grandparents, siblings, aunts, uncles, neighbors are invited. The atmosphere is incredible and it is always a surprise to the instructors and parents to see how much these kids learned. Keeping the pools to a maximum of 3-4 players ensures that everyone receives a 1st, 2nd or 3rd place award. The intent is to recognize the courage to participate while encouraging them to do their best.

Awards do not have to be fancy and expensive. You can find nice picture frames at your local 99¢ store, print your own certificates and place them in the frames. Unlike most common beliefs, I never had a single student drop out of the program because of competition. On the contrary, several parents have informed me that their kid was about to quit judo until they participated in the tournament. The atmosphere and excitement of the competition is what got their kid hooked.

Success Stories

In the February issue of Growing Judo, Mark Lonsdale wrote a great article regarding Recruitment and Retention Practices. To this end, the Tiny Tots program has become a farm team for our regular judo classes. Several of the kids who started in Tiny Tots have continued on to our Junior Judo Program. As per the mission of the Tiny Tots Program, these kids have the love of judo in them. Most of these kids compete on a regular basis, and despite their still young age (7-9 years old now) they are a great example to others and always come back to Tiny Tots help out. It’s Jita Kyoei in action.

Parents have seen firsthand the effects of discipline and the confidence that judo instills in their little ones. Another by-product of Tiny Tots program is the enrollment of older siblings in our Junior Judo Program. Once they see their younger siblings enjoying a good judo practice, they cannot sit still. Many of them start doing the exercises on the side as the class goes on and soon enough they ask their parents to enroll them too.
In addition, since most of the Tiny Tots class parents are in their mid-20 to early 30's, they are still a good age to start in judo. After watching for a session or two, the judo bug often bites them as it did me when my teenagers started judo. Several of these parents have joined our Teen/Adult Judo Program. Some have stuck with it, even achieving black belt ranks and becoming great contributors to the club. Other parents have become club supporters who consistently volunteer to assist at tournaments and other activities.

An offshoot of our Tiny Tots Judo Program is our Kid Safe Seminars, where we teach safety tips, awareness, and avoidance. These regular two-hour seminars satisfy the requirements for the Safety Award in Girl Scouts, Brownies, and Daisies, and attract a dozen or so children and their parents. They are another great opportunity to generate interest in our judo programs; following our most recent seminar we gained five new judo students!

Free Marketing and PR

Our Tiny Tots Judo Program has generated lots of PR for our club and judo in general. The program recently made the cover of the City of Claremont Recreation & Activities Guide, which is distributed to thousands of homes in the local area.

In February, the Mayor, Chief of Police, Senior Managers from City of Claremont, and a reporter and photographer from our local newspaper were invited to our Tiny Tots Tournament. During the opening ceremonies our club received a Certificate of Appreciation signed by the Mayor and the entire City Council. Many of the parents and kids interviewed gave the reporter positive testimonials for an article to be published just in time for our Spring Session.

Start planning for Summer Judo Camps!

Summer is a great time to spend a little extra time on your judo training. Whatever your schedule, location or age, there are some great judo camps to choose from. Here are four great programs that you may want to attend.

North Carolina: Thursday June 21 - Saturday, June 23:
THE GREATEST CAMP ON EARTH
Next Level Center, 4317 Stevens Mill Road, Matthews, NC 28104

This June marks the 21st year of North America’s largest martial arts training camp. After starting in Virginia in 1992, The Greatest Camp has called Matthews, North Carolina home for more than a decade.

Typically we have well over 300 campers, about half of which are juniors. About 2/3 of our more than 120 sessions will focus on various aspects of contest Judo. Other sessions will teach various kata; Sambo; traditional Jujutsu; Brazilian Jiu Jitsu; kendo; kenjutsu; cane-fighting; stick fighting; kappo; knife defenses; referee training; coach certification training; Aikido; karate; kyudo (Japanese archery); yawara; police tactics; dealing with multiple attacks; conditioning methods; and promotional examinations.

The Greatest Camp welcomes campers from all regions of the United States, Europe, and other continents as well. Many, perhaps most, of our campers return year after to continue training and to renew friendships that are likely to be lifelong. Newcomers are made welcome and almost always return in following years.
Instructors include Olympians and national champions from various countries; coaches of national teams; and others of similar standing. This year, Kodokan Cup champion Shinjiro Sasaki and our most requested instructor Nick Lowe will be our featured Judo instructors. World Masters champion Igor Yakimov, a perennial favorite, is returning to teach Sambo for his eighth consecutive year.

Shinjiro Sasaki was a star player on the famous Ryotokuji Japanese professional Judo team. He is a former Japanese National Champion (Kodokan Cup 2005), and the 2007 Pacific Rim Champion. In the spring of 2011, Shinjiro Sasaki came to the United States, where he opened the Sasaki Judo Club in Riverview, Florida. Since then he has trained members of the U.S. Cadet World’s Team, the U.S. infantile Pan-American Games Team, and the U.S. Harnes, France International Team. Sasaki Sensei brings to his teaching the same fire and passion for Judo that he brings to the mat as a competitor. He is a student of educational theory, and a firm believer in individual instruction.

Sensei Sasaki continues his status as a professional Judoka (full time Judo), and he studies, teaches, and holds training events year round. His competition credentials include:

• 2007 Pacific Rim International Judo Tournament - GOLD
• 2006 Syria International Judo Tournament - GOLD
• 2005 Kodokan Cup All Japan Judo National Tournament - GOLD
• 2001 All Japan University Tournament - GOLD
• 2001 - 2011 Numerous International Medals from around the globe

Camp Bushido offers judo and jujitsu practitioners an opportunity to train in multiple classes daily.

The camp features a core of top level regular instructors, "Featured Guest Instructors" who are known national or international competitors and/or high ranking judoka or jujitsuka who have studied in Japan, and of course Professor Charlie Robinson. Many of these featured guest instructors return year-after-year, once they have discovered the magical nature of Camp Bushido. Their added presence weaves an incredible experience for every level of training.

Currently located at Old Oak Ranch in the mountains above Sonora, California, the Hilltop Lodge offers clean and modern air-conditioned rooms and dojos, our own private swimming pool, three nutritious meals brought to us in an open-air dining hall, our own snack bar, and an "always open" coffee bar.

Camp offers opportunities for belt rank promotions and recommendations, along with kata and coaching certifications, supervised by Professor Charlie Robinson, Founder and Camp Director Emeritus, along with other highly qualified instructors.

Family members who are not martial artists can enjoy the spectacular surroundings: hiking trails, streams with brook trout, and close proximity to quaint towns and villages, and the majestic beauty of Yosemite National Park, the Sierra Mountains, and more.

Please download the "Registration Form" and mail it in with a $75 deposit by the June 15th, 2012 deadline for "Early Registration" (see "Brochure") and you will be assured the best rate, a spot in the lodge, a camp group photo, and an official Camp Bushido T-Shirt.

Why you should you attend the "Rise of the Phoenix" Martial Arts Camp:

Ohio used to have a summer camp called "Spirit of the Eagle," but it has not been held for the 3 years. I attended the "Greatest Camp on Earth" in North Carolina in 2010 and 2011 and had a wonderful time. It made me realize how much I missed the camp in Ohio and how much Ohio needed a Camp not only for Judo but all Martial Artists. So, the "Rise of the Phoenix" was born.

We will be using the same format as the "Greatest Camp on Earth" but, we will be offering different courses; everyone would benefit from attending both Camps.

The "Rise of the Phoenix" camp will be held at the Bluffton University. Lodging will be provided on campus in dorm rooms, 2 campers per room; a nearby Comfort Inn is available for those who wish to stay off Campus. Meals will be served on campus. The camp fee of only $275.00 includes lodging, meals, and up to 10 hours of training each day.

Here is a partial list of courses we will be offering:
WRESTLING - BOXING - JU JITSU - SAMBO - KENJUTSU - KANO JU JITSU - MMA - BJJ - SELF DEFENSE - AIKIDO - TAE KWON DO - KARATE - AND OF COURSE JUDO.

Judo for EVERYONE!

You and your judoka friends are invited to join us for the 40th year of the YMCA International Judo Camp. Whether you are a serious competitor who wants a week of challenging judo workouts, drills, and randori; a junior student of any level looking to improve your judo and have a great camp experience; a sensei seeking to broaden your own knowledge or a veteran participant wishing to reconnect with friends, you won’t want to miss this year’s camp!

Founded by George Harris and George Pasiuk, the camp is located in a beautiful lakeside setting, with modern facilities, great food, and all the amenities of a full service camp; activities for young campers like water sports, rock wall climbing, crafts and horseback riding; and a “Kool Zone” where teens can socialize and relax after evening randori.

The judo hall will have over 7,500 sq. ft. of mat area (6 competition areas of high-quality Zebra tatami and Swain flexi-roll mats,) allowing us to work with several individualizes groups at a time, and huge randori sessions.

We have some of the finest coaching education and referee certification programs anywhere. With daily reinforcement and working with active competitors and students you will greatly improve your skills in these areas. We also have an extensive kata program, where you can choose from several kata to learn from world-class instructors. There is instruction in Tai Chi, Self-defense, and a Competitors workshop, in addition to great judo instruction from a host of national and international level instructors.
International Judo Camp Staff

All instructors, counselors and support staff are carefully selected and trained, and are required to meet the highest screening standards set by the YMCA to insure the safety and proper care of young campers at all times. They support the "Key Principles" of the YMCA, which focus "on what is important; the safety of your child, teaching them new skills, and helping them build new friendships."

Clyde Worthen, 6th dan (National Champion and Pan American Gold Medalist) will serve as camp Co-Director for the 2nd year.

This year's guest instructor is Liliko Ogasawara, 5th dan (two-time World Medalist, British Open Gold Medalist and 7-time National Champion).

CLUB PROFILE: STALLION SPRINGS (PAL) JUDO

Stallion Springs PAL Judo began in January 1998 as the Tehachapi Valley Judo Club under the leadership of Head Sensei John Ogelseby, a Kern County Superior Court Judge. In 2003 the club became part of the Stallion Springs Police Activities League (PAL) and has been located the Stallion Springs Community Rec Center since it opened in 2006. In that time the club has produced four black belts; placed at the Nationals and California state championships; and won several Gold medals at the Silver State (NV) championships.

Stallion Springs is a mountain ranching community of 3,200 residents, located just west of the city of Tehachapi, California, and about two hours north of Los Angeles. As the name implies, there are almost as many horses as people in this county, so rodeos and equestrian events are a big part of the local charm. Tehachapi also has the dubious honor of being home to one of California’s largest prisons, but this actually benefits the judo club in that several members are correctional officers or the children of prison staff.

In a time when some clubs are seeing diminishing memberships, Stallion Judo is a healthy and growing club with an active membership of just over forty, including sixteen females, and the strong support of the parents. The club currently trains two nights per week and has junior gradings every three months. Stallion Judo’s short and long term goals are to grow teenage and senior membership and develop a strong team for future competitions. Self-defense programs are also planned for the near future.

Finally, the club would like to extend a special thanks to Gary Goltz for his past and continued support of Stallion Springs PAL Judo.

--Mark Lonsdale, senior instructor managing technical development at Stallion Springs Judo.

In Memoriam

Nick Zaffuto the Founder of South Hills Judo Club in Pittsburgh

Nick Zaffuto, 6th Dan, USJA Life Member 147, passed away quietly on February 8, 2012. He started Judo in 1945 while serving as a Marine stationed at Pearl Harbor. He formed the first Judo Club in Pittsburgh at the downtown YMCA and continuously taught judo for over 60 years. Nick was indeed the father of Pittsburgh Judo.

In 1975 he introduced me to the United States Judo Association and supported my promotion to 1st degree black belt. Later he asked me to run for local AAU Judo Chairman and worked hard to get me elected. This was the beginning of a lifelong involvement in judo politics with the goal of trying to make a positive difference. I will always remember Nick as a good Sensei who was devoted to judo and his students.

In his book, recently published in English, Yoshisada Yonezuka’s recounts a tournament in Pittsburgh, organized by Nick Zaffuto in 1962. At Nick’s request, Yonezuka took on a challenge line of 15 judoka in under 10 minutes. Nick also arranged for a team of 2 women black belts, Jordi Ludwig and Donna Waxter, to be a regular feature at Pittsburgh’s Civic Arena during the Professional Wrestling events. They did an action-packed judo demonstration in the days of Bruno Samartino and ‘Judo’ Gene LeBell. It really helped put judo on the map in my hometown.

Rest in peace Sensei Nick, I’ll miss you.

--Gary Goltz
